ALEXANDRIA.-We made a short visit to Alexandria a few days since, the first since the fire. All things appeared as usual except the burnt district. It was lamentable to look upon the desolation on the old market square, and we do not wonder that sturdy men, unaccustomed to the melting mood, should have wept tic explorer Hall, passed by this city this evenwhen they witnessed the destruction of the ling on her way to New York, from which place place around which hung so many interesting memories associated with Washington and other distinguished men of those golden daysdays that are gone, and gone forever : Workmen are engaged in assorting the brick and removing the debris left of the fire, preparatory to putting up new buildings. It will cost the city a pretty round sum to reconstruct those buildings and the mind is at a loss to decide what punishment should be inflicted upon the miscreant who produced all that desolation and destruction of property.

The merchants and business men generally of the city, seem to be actively engaged in their different vocations. Goods in a great variety and cheap, though it is what they usually term the "dull season" except for har-

We passed through the market during the morning and found it was abundantly supplied, especially with vegetables of every variety even to mulberries. Our citizens should encourage the venerable old city by sending their produce to it and purchasing all their supplies there.-They can do as well with the merchants of Alexandria, all things considered, as in any other market. -- Warren Co.
